National Safe Boating Council Announces Next Communications Coordinator
Yalda Moslehian joins the team December 2013

Bristow, VA (December 19, 2013) – The National Safe Boating Council (NSBC) is pleased to announce that Yalda Moslehian has been selected by the NSBC as the next communications coordinator of the organization.

“We’re excited to have Yalda Moslehian as communications coordinator,” said Rachel Johnson, executive director of the National Safe Boating Council. “Her creativity and interpersonal and organizational communication skills will be an asset to our organization and in supporting NSBC’s mission for safer boating.”

Moslehian has previous experience working for a notable non-profit as the External Affairs Intern. She supported the team with communications collateral and event coordination. She has also worked as a Contributor for DC Life Magazine, writing reviews of Washington D.C’s venues for young adult target audience. Since then, Moslehian has been drawn to non-profit work because of its positive influence and impact it has on people. “I enjoy meeting and helping others with their concerns and needs,” said Moslehian. “I look forward to working for an organization that helps save lives, and also includes my love for water and recreational water sports.”

As the Communications Coordinator, Moslehian provides general management of the Wear It! campaign, including providing support for volunteers and increasing outreach for the Wear It! life jacket message. Moslehian also manages external and internal communications for the NSBC and its members in support of the NSBC’s mission of safer boating through education, outreach and training.

Moslehian grew up in Chantilly, VA, but always traveled to Ocean City, Maryland for her family’s beach trips, international trips to Islands in the Caribbean and Mexico as well the Amalfi Coast in Italy. Her passion for travel and love for water started at an early age. She graduated from George Mason University magna cum laude with a Bachelor of Arts in Communications Studies with a concentration in Personal and Organizational Communications.
